Harry C. Pomeran, David Sheldon, Sally Laurence, and Ruth Vickers, in association with Gateway Enterprises, Inc. are proud to bring you the new Bellport Gateway Playhouse. From its humble beginning in 1941, Gateway was grown to become one of the top summer theatres in America. Originally started as the East Coast's first arena theatre, the old barn with its Elizabethan columns and beams, its intimate stage, and semi-arena seating has many years of fond memories for Gateway's patrons and the area's theatre-goers. It served well during all these years of planning until the new Playhouse could become a reality.

The new theatre is the only plant built as a summer theatre in the last 15 years. Most summer theatres are converted movie houses, barns, halls, and tents. The auditorium, 55' x 70', is the last word in the construction of a safe building for public assembly. The supporting trusses are fire resistant laminated arches designed to preserve the barn flavor. The side walls and roof decking, three inches thick and covered with insulating material, climb to a peak of 26 feet.

The stage house, 30' x 55', one of the largest of any summer theatre, is built entirely of 12" concrete blocks and steel and is fully fire proof. The proscenium opening is 16' x 35' with fly space towering 34 feet above the stage floor. It can accommodate the most intricate system of rigging for the movement of scenery, lights, and curtains. The theatre was designed with complete dressing rooms, green rooms, and an orchestra pit.

The air conditioning system is of newest design, is entirely mechanical in operation, and provides filtered, de-humidified air at consistently cool temperature regardless of the outside hot temperature.

The Playhouse is only one part of the Gateway project. The operation includes a Training Center for students of the theatre and motion pictures, a special arrangement with Columbia Pictures Corporation, an experimental workshop for new plays, and a Colony consisting of a restaurant, residence buildings, studios, and workshops.

In the immediate future, Gateway is planning to build a motion picture sound studio for television and motion pictures. Located on a site in Brookhaven Town, not too far from Bellport, this new Gateway industrial enterprise will use Gateway's pool of actors, directors, writers, and technicians. The public is being invited to participate financially thru limited stock subscription.
